means of communication between different states. The development strategy of the region lies on mutual understanding of different states. The economy of North East India should be treated as a single economy with free inter-state flow of commodities. This development approach is essentially conceived as a special means to social ends. It has greater appeal to those who would like to achieve peaceful socio-economic changes.

* Part-A states, as existed before reorganisation of states in 1956, are those which were Provinces under Governors of British India. Part-B states were the large princely territories like Mysore, Hyderabad, Kashmir, etc. which were merged with India in 1949. * Part-C states were medium-sized princely territories with isolated location and distinct culture, such as Tripura, Manipur, etc. Besides, the national capital, i.e. Delhi, territories transferred from the Portuguese and the French, like Goa and Pondicherry and the island territories of Andaman and Nicobar and Lakshadweep were also made Part-C states. These were later on called as Union Territories. Goa and Pondicherry are now Full-fledged states and the Indian Union.
